What do coaches of advanced or advancing athletes want?

They want the athlete delivered to them (or retained by them), able to perform basic skills and drills that can be extended and refined to produce superior outcomes.

The skill of the “development coach” will in large measure determine the standard achieved.

Training hard is easy ... training smart is the goal that should be sought.

Young athletes should get as far as they can on as little as they can (technique focused) .. there is a right time to train “hard” ... after basic skills are the athlete’s automatic response.

50 repeats forms a habit thousands of repeats to change the habit

The Resources: There is no cost .. It's up to you !!

An eyeful is better than a mouthful

If you want to learn and practice the basic drills for speed, for hurdling, for general sports agility ... speak out .. seek assistance

The world is run by people who speak out

Several DVD's are available to show you fundamental running and hurdle postures .. skills that are fundamental to your progression; not the only things, but important things

Following is an outline of what can be found on three such DVD's .. there are many more.

So, it's up to you; if you want help, be pro-active in seeking that help

Professional Performance

These are a very small number of the drills with which you can challenge yourself or your athletes (in any sport).

Don't complain that help not sought is unavailable

The samples above illustrate the tags available to help you motivate, instruct and reward youngsters

I repeat: don't complain that help not sought is unavailable

The helicopter will not land on the sports oval and whisk you away to an elite sports destiny.

Try to learn (be willing to learn) one thing every time the opportunity presents itself.

Knowledge accumulates quickly

BUT

ONLY in open minds
